Introduction

Bruce Arnold

Bruce Arnold was born in London on 6 September 1936. He was one of five children. His father was a Lieutenant Commander in the Royal Navy. Educated at Kingham Hill School, Oxfordshire, he then completed two years of national service in the British army, serving in Western Germany with the Sixth Armoured Division. In 1957 he came to Ireland to study English and French at TCD. While at Trinity College, he served as editor of TCD Miscellany and as chairperson of the Dublin University Modern Languages Society.

Arnold began his journalistic career at The Irish Times in 1961, working as sub-editor, as well as writing for The Guardian from 1962-68. His work covers a broad spectrum of subjects, ranging from politics to theatre, literature, and culture. By the late 1960s he was a successful freelance journalist, working for newspapers, journals and periodicals in both Ireland and Britain, including The Irish Press, The Sunday Independent, Hibernia, and Business and Finance. He also edited The Dubliner, served as an advisor to the Federation of Irish Industries, wrote a version of the Third Programme for Economic Development, and became an established political commentator in radio and television.

In 1972 he joined the Irish Independent as parliamentary correspondent and political commentator. His column entitled 'Politics and Politicians' had a significant impact, culminating in the telephone tapping controversy in 1982. He also wrote a number of books concerning politics and political figures including biographies of Margaret Thatcher, Charles Haughey, and Jack Lynch. In 1986 he became London editor for the Irish Independent and in 1987 was appointed literary editor.

Arnold has also written extensively on art and literature, producing the first comprehensive study of Irish art, A Concise History of Irish Art (1969), and works on William Orpen, Mainie Jellett and Jack Yeats. In addition he has also produced four novels and the libretto for an opera about Jonathan Swift, A Passionate Man. He has a postgraduate degree of Doctor of Letters from the National University of Ireland, is an Honorary Fellow of Trinity College and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature. In 2003 he was made OBE 'for services to journalism and to British-Irish relations'.

In 1959 Arnold married Ysabel Mavis Cleave and has three children, Hugo, Samuel and Polly. Mavis Arnold is also a journalist, and has had an active role in organisations such as the Women's Political Association.

The Papers

The Bruce Arnold Papers were donated to the National Library in 1997, 2002 (acc. no. 5102) and 2004 (acc. no. 6172). The collection is comprised of manuscripts and typescripts of a number of Arnold's books, journalistic material relating predominantly to the early 1980's (particularly Charles Haughey, the Stardust fire and Northern Ireland), legal documents concerning the telephone tapping controversy in 1982, and material regarding his role as chairperson of The Dun Laoghaire Theatre Project. The collection also contains theatre programmes and related material from the Gate and Gaiety Theatres dating from 1937 onwards. At the request of Mr Arnold, three boxes of the papers are withheld from public consultation.

The papers are arranged as follows: non-fiction monographs, novels and other literary material, journalism including files re phone-tapping episode, and theatre. Within these categories records are arranged chronologically, with the exception of the thematic subdivisions in Group III ('Journalistic work').
