Introduction

This collection of the papers of the late Hilton Edwards and Mícheál Mac Liámmóir is supplementary to another larger collection of their papers listed at the National Library of Ireland in Collection List 117. Edwards and Mac Liámmóir were the founders of the Gate Theatre, Dublin, in 1928, and had been in business for almost fifty years when Mr Mac Liámmóir passed away in 1978. They lived at No. 4, Harcourt Terrace, Dublin and the Gate Theatre was and is situated in Parnell Square. The two artists were immensely talented and used their gifts as actors, producers, set-designers and writers of scripts. The papers date from the 1920s to the early 1980s. Hilton Edwards was an actor of considerable and varied experience who came to Ireland in 1927 to work for Anew McMaster. In the company was Mícheál Mac Liámmóir, artist and actor, who had left the London stage to come to Ireland and devote his time to painting. He spoke six languages including Irish in which he wrote his first play. Under the direction of the two actors, a small company was formed. The Peacock was leased from the Abbey and in October 1928, they opened with Peer Gynt, followed it almost immediately with an English translation of Mac Liámmóir’s legend play, Diarmuid and Gráinne, and ended their second season with the first production of Denis Johnston’s The Old Lady Says No! Having now given ample roof that they were serious workers and genuine men of the theatre, plans were made by Michael Scott to transform part of the Rotunda Buildings into a permanent home for them. The Dublin Gate Theatre Company Limited was registered on Christmas Eve, 1929. Edwards and Mac Liámmóir continued to construct the theatre of their imagination. They chose the plays together and Edwards produced and lit them while Mac Liámmóir designed costumes and settings, and painted all the scenery himself. A new play was presented every fortnight, and the little Gate grew steadily in reputation and following. They toured abroad with great success. The Gate Theatre continues to produce plays of an exceptional standard and is now in its 80th year.
