The Papers

This archive is the largest and the most varied holding of Austin Clarke manuscripts, more extensive than the Clarke archive at the University of Texas at Austin, the other main repository of Clarke Mss. It was acquired from the poet’s son, R Dardis Clarke. It contains manuscripts relating to Clarke’s poetry, critical and creative prose, verse plays and theatre, his broadcasting career, notebooks, and correspondence written by and addressed to Austin Clarke throughout his adult life. Clarke worked as a broadcaster at Radio Éireann (later Radio Telefís Éireann) for over thirty years, and this collection contains carbons of poems, plays and prose extracts which the members of the Dublin Verse-Speaking Society, of which he was co-founder, performed on air and on stage. The archive also contains a considerable holding of poems which listeners to his radio programmes submitted to him and which he adjudicated. It also contains thousands of items of correspondence, the largest section of which relates to Radio Éireann. Clarke used notebooks as aide memoires, and to record jottings for poems. Some contain drafts of correspondence from Clarke.

When the National Library of Ireland acquired the collection, the Mss were loosely organized, and in some cases no organizing principle was discernible. Some hundreds of sheet copies of poems intended for broadcast were, however, already in alphabetical order. One envelope of Mss, for example, contained drafts, fair copies and Tss relating to poems from the collections The Horse-Eaters, Old-Fashioned Pilgrimage, Ancient Lights, Night and Morning, Mnemosyne Lay in Dust, The Echo at Coole and Other Poems, Flight to Africa, Collected Poems (1974) (‘The Sword of the West’), end-notes for Collected Poems (1974), notes towards unpublished memoirs, fragments from Penny in the Clouds and Twice Round the Black Church, Tss of reviews, and stray sheets from drafts of verse drama and miscellaneous other notes and fragments. The pages were in no particular sequence.

The manuscripts are classified under the following headings: correspondence, poetry, prose, verse plays and theatre, notebooks, broadcast scripts, a small collection of Joseph Campbell Mss, and a group of miscellaneous items. Within these categories they are presented chronologically or in alphabetical order, or a combination of both. Correspondence is presented in the alphabetical order of correspondents. Where the correspondent is a company or organization, the signatory is also cited. Mss of Clarke’s own poetry is organized chronologically. However, boundaries are not always clear either within or between the listed groups. Clarke often re-drafted material already published in other forms: articles became poems, critical and autobiographical essays sometimes re-appeared as reviews. It is not always certain, therefore, where early rough drafts and fragments should be assigned, since they might relate to, for example, a review, an extended essay or article, a portion of autobiography or a poem.

Where typed sheets are well formatted and relatively error-free, it is likely that they are the work of Clarke’s wife Nora, to whom he dictated drafts and who recorded them in shorthand before typing them from the early 1930s onwards. Where the typing is heavily flawed it is more likely to be Clarke’s own.

In the original documents, accents, especially in the writing of people’s names, have not been used consistently. Accordingly, they have been omitted in the catalogue from names such as ‘Sean O Faolain’ and ‘Micheal Mac Liamoir’, where they are used variably. However, they have been retained where they are used consistently, as, for example, in ‘Radio Éireann’. No full stop is used to indicate an abbreviation.

Austin Clarke

Austin Clarke (1896-1974), poet, dramatist, critic, romance novelist and broadcaster, was born in Dublin and educated at Belvedere College, Dublin, Mungret College, Limerick, and University College Dublin, where he was awarded first class honours primary and masters degrees in English language and literature. His literary circle included FR Higgins, George Russell, Joseph Campbell and Stephen MacKenna, and in 1917 his first book of verse, an epic poem, The Vengeance of Fionn, was published to considerable acclaim. In autumn 1917 he was appointed assistant lecturer in the department of English at University College Dublin. His mental health deteriorated and in 1919 he was committed to St Patrick’s Hospital, where he remained over a year. Before his hospitalisation he had met Lia Cummins (1889-1943) and they married secretly in 1920, but the union lasted less than a fortnight. Two books of epic poetry, The Fires of Baal and The Sword of the West, were published in 1921. Clarke then established himself in London as a literary journalist although he also continued to spend time in Ireland.
He worked as a literary reviewer for Times Literary Supplement, Nation and Athenaeum, New Statesman, and, from 1927, TP's Weekly, a popular paper owned by TP O'Connor MP, where he regularly adopted editorial duties. In addition, in the 1930s, his reviews appeared in the Observer and London Mercury. The publishers George Allen and Unwin issued a vigorous collection of poems, The Cattledrive in Connaught, in 1925. The following year, Clarke’s first play, The Son of Learning, was published in the Dublin Magazine, having been rejected by WB Yeats at the Abbey Theatre. Terence Gray staged it as part of the Cambridge Theatre Festival in 1927, and Hilton Edwards and Micheal Mac Liamoir had it performed in the Gate Theatre Dublin in 1930, the year in which The flame: a play in one act was also published. Pilgrimage and Other Poems (1928) signalled Clarke’s departure from mythological subject matter in favour of the historically verifiable late medieval monastic period. The first of three romance novels set in medieval Ireland, The Bright Temptation (1932), The Singing-Men at Cashel (1936) and The Sun Dances at Easter (1952), all proscribed under the Censorship of Literature Act (1929), was commercially successful.

In 1932 WB Yeats nominated Clarke a founder member of the Irish Academy of Letters, whose aim was to resist censorship, which Clarke passionately opposed all his life. He served as the Academy’s president in 1952-4. By 1931 he had met Nora Walker, and together they raised three boys, Donald, Aidan and Robert Dardis. From 1933 to 1937 the family settled in St Albans, Hertfordshire. A proposal in the mid-1930s that Clarke write a biography of WB Yeats had to be abandoned when Yeats was unco-operative. From 1933-7 Clarke acted as an adjudicator at the Oxford Festival of Spoken Poetry, and his fortieth birthday saw the issue of his Collected Poems.

In 1937 he settled in Bridge House, Templeogue, where he remained until his death. Despite Templeogue’s pleasant ambience, the tortuous poems of Night and Morning, published in 1938, bespeak a scrupled individuality struggling with the loss of faith. As a member of the writers’ association, PEN, and sometime President of its Dublin centre (1942), he continued to resist censorship. His reviews were a regular feature of The Irish Times’s literary page from 1940 until his death, except for a five-year hiatus (1962-7), and he contributed substantially to Seumas O’Sullivan’s Dublin Magazine.

In 1939 he and Robert Farren, broadcaster and poet, established the Dublin Verse-Speaking Society, and it remained active until the late 1960s. It frequently broadcast dramatic and choral poetry, introduced and directed by Clarke, on Radio Éireann. In addition it performed verse plays and dramatic verse annually in the Peacock Theatre. In 1944 Clarke formed the Lyric Theatre Company which drew on the talents of the Society but also employed professional actors and directors. Until 1951, it staged verse performances, usually twice annually, often including Clarke’s own plays in its repertoire. Radio Éireann broadcast many of these performances. In the 1940s Clarke published eight plays, most under his own Bridge Press imprint and in limited editions, all performed by the Lyric or his verse-speakers. His Collected Plays appeared in 1963, followed by Two Interludes Adapted from Cervantes (1968) and The Impuritans (1973). A second volume of collected plays mooted before his death did not materialise. Posthumously published plays include The Third Kiss: A Comedy in One Act (1976) and Liberty Lane (1978). Clarke’s radio programmes, broadcast regularly over more than a quarter century, sought to popularise and evaluate poetry and his series of poetry competitions held considerable appeal, attracting entries from some notable aspiring writers.

Dolmen Press published Ancient Lights, Poems and Satires (1955), which found him new readers, and by the 1960s many regarded him as the greatest Irish poet since Yeats. The publication of the long poem, Mnemosyne Lay in Dust (1966), was a personal landmark as well as a critical success: its subject matter is Clarke’s 1919 breakdown, here confronted publicly for the first time. In old age he returned often to the epic form to proclaim secular redemption and release, attainable through eroticism, with some success in ‘The healing of Mis’. When he died in 1974, his Collected Poems 1917-1974 was in preparation, and was published later that year by Dolmen Press.

Correspondence

By far the most diverse group in the Clarke archives is his correspondence. It is organised in three groups: correspondence addressed to Clarke, correspondence written by him, and correspondence in his possession that was neither written by nor addressed to him. In each case, the correspondence is presented in alphabetical order, and, where more than one item is included from the same correspondent, these are listed chronologically within the alphabetical system. The year of the correspondence is given, and the figure in brackets following the date relates to the number of items of correspondence in that year. In most cases the signatory of a company is cited.

Among Clarke's correspondents are poets such as Gordon Bottomley, Seamus Heaney, Derek Mahon, Hugh MacDiarmid, TS Eliot, Ewart Milne, Donagh MacDonagh, Vivian Mercier, Monk Gibbon, Padraig Fallon, Robert Farren, and Leslie Daiken; actors such as Cyril Cusack; theatres such as the Abbey and Gate Theatres; and publishers such as Allen and Unwin, Dolmen Press, Melrose, Clarendon Press, Williams and Norgate, and Routledge.

The largest subgroup of correspondence relates to Radio Éireann, or Radio Telefís Éireann, the Irish broadcasting company for which Clarke worked as a contributor, presenter and producer of programmes for more than a quarter of a decade. In later years, Clarke presented a listeners' poetry competition as part of a programme presented by Liam Nolan. Correspondence signed by Francis MacManus, Robert Farren and Mervyn Wall on behalf of Radio Éireann/Radio Telefís Éireann are listed separately, and each item of correspondence from listeners is also listed. Those letters from listeners addressed to Liam Nolan but intended for Clarke’s poetry competition, which in later years formed part of the Liam Nolan programme, are also listed. Many of the listeners’ poems may be found here, attached to the letters addressed either to Clarke or, in later years, to Liam Nolan. Other listeners’ poems may be found in the broadcast section of the catalogue.

Another significant set of correspondence is from Seumas O’Sullivan, with whom Clarke collaborated in the publication of the Tower Press booklets, and who was the editor of The Dublin Magazine to which Clarke contributed articles and poems, and for which he edited the work of others, such as the letters of AE (George Russell).

Correspondence from Universities is listed separately but under the heading ‘Universities’.

Radio Telefís Éireann/Radio Éireann (RTÉ/RE), signed Robert Farren [Roibéard O Farachain], 1939 (7), 1940 (9), 1941 (5), 1942 (7, including 1 incomplete), 1943 (6, 1 incomplete), 1944 (6), 1945 (3), 1946 (8), 1947 (7, including a review by Padraig Fallon), 1948 (1), 1949 (1), 1950 (1), 1956 (1), 1957 (1), 1968 (1), 1971 (1), 1972 (1), nd (6, including 2 incomplete letters, 1 in need of conservation; on the reverse of one is a TS draft of a letter to Frank O’Connor concerning the banning of Eric Cross’s The Tailor and Ansty), invites Clarke to broadcast under the general title ‘This Set Me Thinking’; gives fee details; invites Clarke to talk about ‘This Set Me Thinking’ and ‘New Verse’; informs Clarke that there is a batch of entries for ‘New Verse’; sends Clarke poems; will write to entrants whose poems have been chosen for a second reading; reserved a date for overflow competition; requests that a form be filled in and returned; has a batch of ‘New Verse’ entries; asks Clarke to review books; thanks Clarke for his criticism; requests that Clarke give a copy of Douglas Hyde’s Tomaus O Cahan and the Ghost to Arthur (Little); printers will send proofs of The Book of Broadcast Verse to review lay-out; thinks it will be difficult to include Edith Sitwell; suggests that Clarke might include a poem by himself or by Farren; dates for rehearsals; informs Clarke that permission has been obtained from 3 verse competitors; cannot attend meeting; suggests that [Bob] Mooney might be used in a broadcast of Deirdre; cannot make meeting; problems with his teeth; publisher objects to being informed of broadcast of Helen Waddell after the event; arrangements for rehearsal of ‘The Tower of Marl’; sends Clarke material to be criticised; sends Clarke Le Baiser; Flu has prevented him from attending programmes; awaits Clarke’s honest opinion on work he is about to complete; ‘New Verse’ is to be suspended and replaced with a series of talks perhaps on little-known poets; urges Clarke to consider doing articles on Irish poetry as criticism is desperately rare; suggest a weekly article in The Irish Times; suggests that opinion be organised in favour of a standard anthology with a good anthology by Clarke; when talks and recitals are alternated people do not remember which is programmed; asks for titles for talks; liked Clarke’s ‘The Blue Monk’; requests a list of copyright poems for programme entitled ‘Humorous Poems and Songs’; requires scripts at least four days ahead; requests the names of readers in ‘New Verse’ programme and ‘Ballades without Tune’; asks whether Clarke will call for new verse entries or whether he should send it; informs Clarke of permissions received to broadcast poems; sends Clarke ‘Declamations’ set to Grieg’s music; invites Clarke to participate in a broadcast on people who have spent time abroad; tells Clarke that the publisher Sheed will bring out his new book of poetry, if necessary without Browne and Nolan’s help; suggested an anthology to Sheed and he thinks that there would be a very big sale for it; Farren is to write a long introduction; Sheed also wants a history of Irish literature, to be started whenever Farren likes; he would prefer to finish a book of poems before he starts anything; suggests a date for the broadcast of Clarke’s As the Crow Flies; accepts Clarke’s resignation from the O’Kelly and Dublin Magazine programmes; will pay a fee for the former; must withdraw the latter if Clarke withdraws the script; considers this unfair to Seumas O’Sullivan; gives an account of the financial position for November 1943; in future choral programmes will not be booked at the expense of Clarke’s usual weekly programme; considers the payment offered by no means bad, the highest paid to any producer; resents Clarke adopting the attitude that Farren is merely an official; sends Clarke Michael Drayton’s poetry; has booked a date for Clarke’s As the Crow Flies; has made efforts to contact Clarke; confirms dates for Clarke’s broadcasts; details of permissions to broadcast obtained; comments on Aodh De Blacam’s enthusiastic review in The Irish Press; the only satisfactory way of avoiding disappointment is to ensure that permission is sought to broadcast poems well in advance; verse-speakers have complained that they have been given little work in general programmes, but Farren does not think there is much truth in that; comments that one member is a very bad lifeless solo speaker; has found extra time for choral programmes; another speaker must remain although both Farren and Clarke have reservations about him; Farren has increased the quantity of book review programmes; it is not a fact that the professional writer has been silence, but practical considerations have demanded that one broadcaster speak several reviews; wants the Copy of Drayton’s poems back; Farren does not believe that ‘New Verse Competition’ has been abandoned; gives details of fees for 6 broadcasts; gives date for broadcast of Tomaus (Douglas Hyde’s Tomaus O Cahan and the Ghost) and believes that Lawrence Binyon’s Brief Candles has not sufficient quality to justify a broadcast; would like to reread Clarke’s The Flame before he answers Clarke’s query; invites Clarke to speak on ‘The Book I’m Writing Now’; seeks title for the talk; details of payment; disagrees that giving advance notice of the content of poetry programmes is ‘introducing poetry under jazz slogans’; requests details of Clarke’s programmes 3 weeks in advance, so that it may be supplied to the press; permission obtained for broadcast of poems; is dubious of the success of The Flame as a radio play; invites Clarke to call to discuss misunderstanding about ‘New Verse’; Radio
Éireann has an agreement with certain publishers and now need not write for permission to broadcast their poems; might repeat a programme ‘Man around Shakespeare’; wants particulars of programmes ‘Poems about Women’; sends Clarke a copy of Padraic Fallon’s review of Clarke’s The Second Kiss (included here); informs Clarke that 2 letters complimenting a programme had arrived; BBC 3 wants recordings of Seumas O’Sullivan’s poems and Farren requires names of readers and details of fees; gives details of Clarke’s fees and states that the arrangements worked to his advantage; responds to Clarke’s complaint to Mervyn Wall concerning the absence of an announcer, the interruption of a broadcaster from another studio, the congregating of members of the orchestra outside the studio and the availability of a studio; Farren deplores the upset to Clarke’s programme; sends Clarke a cheque and informs him that he will be paid a regular weekly amount; an error in accounts has meant that Clarke did not receive an increase in pay; details of payment to verse-speakers; states that they have received free training and greater pay than have poets; would be sorry if there were any long-lived hostility between Farren and Clarke; admires Clarke as a foremost poet and his dispraise of Farren’s play; thinks Clarke’s forthcoming programme is excellent; asks him to call has sent Clarke a bundle of new verse and gives dates for programmes; will draft a list of FR Higgins poems for Clarke’s comments; casting of Farren’s play; Patricia Boylan’s absence from verse-speaking; has spoken to Ernest Blythe concerning a grant, 72 items

Radio Telefís Éireann/Radio Éireann (RTE/RE), signed Francis MacManus, 1947 (1), 1948 (17, including a copy of a letter to AD Peters), 1949 (14), 1950 (20), 1951 (14, 1 of which includes a 5 pp TS of poems by Bruce Williamson), 1953 (3), 1957 (1), 1961 (1), 1964 (1), 1965 (2), nd (2), permission granted to broadcast various named poems; while a special modern programme is an excellent idea, but fears that Irish poets could easily be pushed into a few programmes; suggests instead that a special programme of modern Irish poetry and one on Irish balladry to extend Clarke’s audience and dispel the notion that poetry is arcane; sends Clarke a copy of a letter to AD Peters (attached), London; as the state broadcasting company, it cannot sidestep authors’ accredited agents; wishes to record Clarke’s The Viscount of Blarney; congratulates Clarke on his show at the Abbey Theatre; informs Clarke that the Department of External Affairs wants copies of his plays; copyright payments are draining resources; insists that Clarke does not include any more copyright poems other than those by Irish poets; sends a list of future programmes; declines invitation to record Clarke’s As the Crow Flies as other arrangements have been made; Sylvia Townsend Warner wishes to be informed of the date of broadcast of programme in which her poem is read; no more copyright poetry to be broadcast before the end of 1950; resents the tone of Clarke’s letter; aware that it is difficult for Clarke to run programme without using contemporary writers, but notes that contemporary younger Irish poets have not been given a just place; has communicated with 26 poets under 50 years of age and has received 3 replies; invites Clarke to mark the poems that he considers suitable; Valentine Iremonger has declined to have his work included; encloses Lord Moyne’s [Bryan Guinness’s] reply; encloses John Hewitt’s, Roy McFadden’s, Ethna McCarthy’s and Robert Greacen’s poems; sends a letter from Temple Lane and Patrick Galvin; sends books of poetry by Denis Devlin; a TS of poems by WR Rodgers; the station requires 3 weeks’ notice to clear copyright; sends Patrick MacDonagh’s contribution to ‘Irish Poets of Today’; requires the names of contributors to the programme in advance; invites suggestions for a series of programmes to follow ‘The Player’s Chapbook’ series; invites Clarke to start a new verse competition in 1961; change of broadcast dates; invites Clarke to write a Thomas Davis lecture; asks Clarke to review books for broadcast; invites Clarke to help prepare programmes on Irish writers; invites Clarke to contribute to a series provisionally entitled ‘Here’s Richness’, 76 items

Correspondence from unidentified writers, 1939-1969
II Poetry

This group includes galley proofs, Tss, drafts, fair copies, fragments of poems, all written by Clarke c 1913-1974. In most cases, Clarke published poetry relatively soon after composition, so the dates of publication are a guide to date of composition. However, he radically altered, abbreviated and rewrote many of his early poems for inclusion in Collected Poems 1974 in the years preceding. Much of the early apprentice work included here has not been published. There are also sections of the poem, ‘The Intoxication of the Ulstermen’ and draft fragments of other epics. There are also some early drafts and fragments of poetry in Clarke’s notebooks.

III Dramatic works

Clarke wrote seventeen plays, some of which remained unpublished at the time of this death. He co-founded the Dublin Verse-Speaking Society, whose members performed regularly on radio in the 1940s and 1950s. He was also co-founder of the Lyric Theatre, which staged performances until the 1950s. This group includes A and T drafts and fragments of plays. In some cases the Ts were probably prepared for stage performances, or broadcasters, or for publication. MSS are listed here in the order of first publication of the plays.

From 1939 until his death Clarke broadcast programmes on Radio Éireann. From 1940 he regularly presented programmes, and he also produced and researched literary programmes. With the assistance of the Dublin Verse-Speaking Society, and later the Radio Éireann players and occasionally the members of the Lyric Theatre, he broadcast poems and verse-plays, and, in addition, he presented literary review programmes. Included here are TSS of poems, most of which were read on air by Clarke or members of the DVSS/Lyric Theatre, and some which listeners sent to Clarke for his appraisal. Typescripts of plays are listed alphabetically, according to their author’s surname. Most popular of Clarke’s broadcasts were his poetry competitions, for which listeners submitted poems, and from which a number of winners were chosen. These are presented in alphabetical order. Children’s poems are grouped separately. This group contains TSS of Clarke’s broadcasts from 1940-1968. They are organised as follows: dated MSS; undated programme scripts sometimes incomplete. Some have attached TSS of poems by published poets, some have competition entries attached. However, many of the scripts do not contain poetry TSS.

V Notebooks

Throughout his life, Clarke carried notebooks in which he jotted down notes, drafts of reviews, articles, poems, plays, letters, diaries of dreams, lists, background research and fragments. In later years, he dictated to his wife, Nora, his correspondence, articles and reviews, some of which is contained in notebooks. Some of the notebooks listed here are therefore in Nora Clarke’s hand, some are shared by both Clarke and Nora. They are ordered according to the date first used, but they were sometimes reused years or decades after the initial entries.

V.i In Nora Clarke’s hand

Notebooks or incomplete notebooks in Nora Clarke’s hand, August 1938 - February 1940, containing drafts of correspondence, reviews, essays, articles, broadcasts, notes, reader’s reports, costs of Lyric performances etc; writing is on one side of a leaf only on lighter quality paper.

VI  Prose works

This group contains Clarke’s Tss, autograph scripts, fragments and drafts of prose writing, from his early university assignments which date back to c 1912, through reviews, critical essays and his monograph-length critical prose. Also included are drafts and a revised TS of Clarke’s MA thesis on John Ford and some of his autobiographical prose, mainly related to A Penny in the Clouds. Feature articles sometimes take narrative form. Included are autograph scripts in Nora Clarke’s hand, which were probably dictated by Clarke. Clarke often repeats episodes and positions in several publications, drawing on autobiographical prose already published in, for example, reviews and critical articles. This group also includes drafts of Clarke’s autobiographical prose works, some unpublished prose and an unpublished novel.
